

THE GAZETTE.

SATURDAY EVENING, JUNE 4, 1892.

A SCANDAL IN NICE.—A case which has created considerable of a sensation in society at Nice was settled yesterday by the tribunal of that place. It was the suit brought by the young Count Menabrea against his wife and a Polish count named Orzesko, whom he charged with undue intimacy. Count Orzesko was formerly a very warm friend of the aggrieved husband. Count Menabrea and his wife, both of whom are Italians, were prominent members of the aristocratic society of the town and occupied a fine house on the Boulevard Carabacel.

It was necessary for Count Menabrea to be frequently absent from his home on business, and it is alleged, the countess seized these opportunities to send for her lover. Count Menabrea finally grew suspicious of his wife, and on a certain day in December last, when she thought he would be away for some time, the count, accompanied by the commissary of police, suddenly returned to his home and surprised the guilty pair. Count Menabrea thereupon, as is the custom in Nice, served both parties with notices of a prova verbal, and also entered an action for divorce.

The result of the trial was the imposition on the Countess Menabrea and Count Orzesko of a fine of $20 (or about 100 francs) and costs each, on the charge of adultery.
